Thus :sleet frost and thew, in " rain and strine " as the Yankees say, the football reporter has to turn out once or twice a week. Remember, he donot attend matches like the common or sixpenny spectator—as a matter of pleasure. He is there as a matter of duty. If gentle zephers fan the players so much the better, but if the rade north wind sweeps the plain, if cutting east winds blow. he is there all the same. He cannot say, "Ugh, I don't think I'll go to the match to-day." If it' fine the prospect is tempting, but if the flood-gates of beaven are opened and it raineth without infermission he is there all the same. The football reporter must never trouble himself about such details as chills, colds, conglis, enturels, consumption, and rheumatism. Of course, a dose of any well-known patent medicine will cure all the ills, that the fl-sh of the football sor be is heir to. In a well-known song, entitled "Going to Market," the refrain commences with the word-"Never mind the weather, love." This is what the stav-at-home editor whist we to the angelic football reporter. Only he does not whisper, he does not employ such a term of endearment a-" love," and the reporter, be he even an hero, is frequently not angelic. It is quite possible for a man to be a hero without being an angel and vice versa. In fact, I have known several instances of both cases myself. Mid show and ice, with numbed fingers and foes, the football reporter does not strike an imaginary or picturesque attitude and erv. "Excelsior!" No: merely sharpens a lead pencil and tells the feather-bed sportgmen, who are always the most enthusiastic club supporters, how Billy Tortuoran air nonely wound his way past the backs of the markend Spinesplitters and deftly scored a glerious goal for the Riberacking Rovers Talk about the lot of the policeman, who feeds on the cook's pigeon pie and her master's beer, not b ing a happy one-Bah! When journalistic duty's to be done, the lot of the football reporter is not a happy one. PERSONAL EXPERIENCES. · I have known what it is to stand behind a goalpost for two hours in order to write a more or less graphic and truthful account of a match. Under these circumstances one has to turn one's left hand into a desk and scribble away on a notebook. A critic gives his impressions of new pluy o. pera, a reviewer sets furth hi opinions on a book, and the editor expresses hi views on the political situation. If a football match were reported by a corps of a dozen reporters it would be no better Every second the field changes like a kaleidoscope, and in the thick of the fight the players are but so man tearing, mangling, scoroling dimons. What [wonder at -taking one consideration with another-is the general accuracy of the reports On the whole I think the reporters of the couptry do their duty nobly and well by football, and as I have already suggested I do not think they obtain sufficient kndos or coin for difficult work under difficult circumstances. OBJECTIONABLE JOURNALISTS. There are, however, two other classes of reorters who have from time to time roused my ire on the field and off. First of all I chi et to the partisan-reporter; the pressman who can see no skill in other teams; whose eyes are blinded to the finits of his own eleven, and very wide open to detect the follies of their opponents: and who has no tongue save to applied the prowess and the success of his team I know one or two of these gentlemen.
